Important Notes about Your College Planning Partnerships Schools That Will Pay You To Attend

- The scholarships listed in this report are funded by the colleges they are listed with. They are not transferable, if you do not attend that college or university.
- At most colleges you can receive only one academic scholarships. So, if you qualify for more than one, you are usually allowed to accept the one with the highest value.
- The scholarships listed on this report are all "merit" scholarships. Thus, they do not take into account your income or assets. For informational purposes, we have included the financial aid deadlines. In order to receive "need- based" money, you must apply separately to the financial aid office.
- We include admission, scholarship, and financial aid deadlines for information purposes. It is possible that the school will change the deadline, so please call the school to verify all deadlines.
- While our database is comprehensive, there still may be schools that offer scholarships and have been omitted. If you are interested in a particular school and they are not listed, check the school website and call its financial aid office for more information. Please notify us as well, so we can add it to our database.

Comments

Dear Frieda,

I hope that you find this report as enlightening as I did. I'm here for your questions.

Disclaimer

Since the individual colleges award the scholarships and make all decisions pertaining to scholarship recipients, College Planning Partnerships makes no guarantee as to the number or amount of scholarships that a student may actually qualify for or receive. All data in our database was obtained by our staff of researchers who either visited the schools scholarship web page or called the admission office at the school. In some cases, the schools did not have a minimum requirement, and we asked for the average of the previous years recipients. In that case, we entered in SAT, ACT, and GPA numbers that were slightly below the average, with the understanding that some students scored below the average. Just because a school is included in the report, it does not guarantee that the student meets all admission criteria for the school.
